Xtreme Dream Crew Steps Up....BIG TIME!!

Posted by Xtreme Dream Team on Jul 30, 2012 in 2012 Training, Blog | 1 comment

I am dumbfounded to learn that three of my Teammates have stepped up to donate ALL of the food provisions for the entire expedition. Nancy Jordan (driver for my personal escort boat Voyager) and Mick Kilgos (drummer extraordinaire and owner, Mick's Original Caribe Beans) have purchased nutritious meals for 55 (55!!!) crew members for our Cuba quest....a 4-day journey. Jennifer Connell, chef and owner of The Small Chef at Large Catering Company here in Key West, has prepped all the meals and is storing in her fridges until we are a Go. Jennifer here in the purple....Nancy...

Take the Pressure Off

I've come a long way in patience, perhaps wisdom, during the long and arduous and winding three years of emotions while chasing this Xtreme Dream. I've finally learned not to worry about the weather. My time will come. I don't know when it will be. I can't control when it...

There's training. That's the hard part. Then there's peaking. That's the tricky part. It takes experience... and confidence.....to manage your energy, to capture the results of all your hard work, and to bring all the factors your sport requires together on the day you're going to ask your body to perform at its...

Response to Heat Drip Dialogue

Posted by Xtreme Dream Team on Jul 20, 2012 in 2012 Training, Blog | 40 comments

I actually do appreciate so many of you weighing in with your opinions on the Heat Drip action we are perhaps planning on using for moments of hypothermia on the way across from Cuba. When a dialogue is intelligent and thoughtful, it opens everybody's minds to discussion that moves us forward. Let me first say that I certainly hope that all of you out there know of my pedigree for many years in this sport. I have always upheld the highest ideals. It is the champions who achieve under the purest circumstances whom I respect.....and I have always, proudly, fallen into that category. I never...

Prep for Hypothermia

Hard to believe that you would ever feel cold in 86-degree water. But think about it. Let's say you were fresh. You run a bath. Maybe 104 degrees. You want to soak and read the newspaper. As soon as the water cools to your body temperature, and drops a degree or two below that, you reach for the hot water handle to heat the tub back up. So what if you've been swimming for two non-stop days. You've been spending thousands and thousands of calories, not able to replenish all of what you're burning by churning your muscles and creating a metabolic output. Now you are...
