

SUCCESS

What Achievers Read

SUCCESS Magazine - September 2011

Register with SUCCESS Member Login

0 Items

View Cart

Enter keywords...

Home

Subscribe

Current Issue

SUCCESS Channels

Experts

Store

Blog

Videos

About Us

Seeds of SUCCESS

Great ideas, tips
and inspiration planted in your
inbox every week.
Find out More

Subscribe Instantly

Submit

Holiday Season

What are you doing
to keep the busyness
of the holiday season
manageable?

- ☐ Purposefully scheduling in time for myself and my family
- ☐ Shopping early or online to avoid mall
traffic
- ☐ Limiting the number of parties I attend
- ☐ Nothing! I love the buzz that the holidays bring!

Submit

The New 61

Thirty years after a dream eluded her, swimmer Diana Nyad is out to show the world what commitment looks like.

★★★★★ Don Yaeger |

More than 90 miles of open ocean lies between Cuba and South Florida. For Diana Nyad, that stretch of shark-infested water equates to about 65 continuous hours of solitude, if all goes well—no rest, no physical contact with another person, no sound or movement except for the rhythmic kick-stroke-breathe, kick-stroke-breathe. Nyad, 61, is swimming every inch of this journey without assistance... or a shark cage.

From the moment you meet Nyad, her passion for life is obvious. Everything she talks about carries a note of excitement, an audible thrill for the opportunity each new day brings. Nyad's impressive résumé—multiple world-record holder in endurance swimming, journalist, author and motivational speaker—belies her personal philosophy that life isn't really a series of accomplishments. For Nyad, it's more about pulling together all the elements that go into the pursuit of a goal and seeing where they take you.

Update 8/9/11: Battling shoulder pain, asthma and nausea, Diana Nyad called off the swim at the halfway mark between Cuba and Florida.

"You don't simply tell someone to get out there and win the tennis match," she tells SUCCESS. "You say 'move your feet' or 'watch the fuzz on the ball' to really get into the Zen of it. You pull all that together and then you just might hold up the Wimbledon Plate.... It's not about winning first place but bringing every element of effort to whatever you do."

Nyad's determination to fully invest in every aspect of a pursuit is one of the compelling forces behind her August 2011 swim from Cuba. The intense training, discipline and drive are more compelling to her than becoming the first person ever to accomplish this feat. She laughs at how obvious that must seem since, after all, it would be crazy to think that 65 hours of isolation and extreme physical exhaustion would be the reward.

To understand her perspective, you have to know a little more about Nyad. In 1975, she swam around Manhattan Island in a jaw-dropping seven hours and 57 minutes. In 1979, she swam from Bimini to Florida, a distance of 102.5 miles, which set a new world distance record that stood for nearly 20 years. And she did it all with a smile, loving the opportunities she got to push herself and embrace new challenges.

One of her biggest challenges was her first attempt to swim from Cuba to Florida in 1978. "For previous generations, swimming the English Channel was the feat to accomplish," she says. "And that's been done. Now, there is probably no other body of water that has the mystery and mythology to it like the stretch between the U.S. and Cuba has."

But her dream to conquer that distance was curtailed more than 30 years ago by rough seas and strong winds. After 42 hours of swimming, with her only "breaks" coming when she stopped to tread water while eating peanut butter for energy or drinking fresh water handed to her from the escort boat, she was forced to face the reality of the situation; the weather had blown them so far off course that they didn't have sufficient provisions and equipment to last. More than two-thirds of the way into the swim, she was forced to abandon the effort.

Nyad was disappointed but undaunted. She had proven to herself that she had the discipline and mindset to train for the task; sometimes circumstances just don't allow for plans to come together the way we'd like them to. Instead, she turned her attention to other goals, eventually moving from swimming to new challenges. She's been part of a team that cycled the length of Vietnam. She's kayaked waterfalls in Borneo. She has established a career as a respected journalist, covering everything from the Olympic Games to banned substances in major league sports as a correspondent for Fox Sports and National Public Radio, besides writing a number of books and articles. "It's not like I was waking up in cold sweats with regrets that I hadn't done the swim," she says.

But as 60 neared, she began to evaluate her life and consider what she really wanted to do with her self-described "prime years." When her mother died, Nyad was struck by "how quickly this precious life goes by" and decided to prove that no one should just fade into retirement simply because that's what society dictates.

She longed for that feeling of commitment and drive that had been so important in all of her swimming feats when she was younger. And there was only one challenge she'd chased in her life that she wished had gone differently, so she started to plan.

"I think 60 is when many people hit their prime," she says. "We elect many of our presidents in their 60s. At that age, people are full of ideas and their best self. I wanted to dig into my potential and bring out my best self."

It wasn't about torturing her body to prove she wasn't getting older. "It's not masochism," she laughs. "I just had to look at myself in the mirror... and say, 'You have this in you!'"

And so, more than 30 years after retiring from swimming, Nyad hit the ocean again. It's a lesson she says is relevant to everyone: "Write that novel. Start that business you've always wanted to. The ultimate high of life is the commitment to pursuing something. I wanted to feel that commitment again."

Nyad's hours in the water give her a lot of time to separate herself from concrete thinking and exercise her mind in new ways. With so much exertion and such limited stimulation for the senses (quiet water, foggy goggles), the logical side of the mind powers down and a dreamlike state takes over. In the 1970s when she trained, Nyad explained that her mind would often wander to questions along the lines of: “What is life about? What is the universe? All sorts of Zeitgeist stuff.... But then you hear a whistle from the boat or see a dark shape pass underneath you in the water—and it kind of wakes you up.”

She still has her deep moments but admits it's not all so serious. Recently, while training in Mexico, her nephew's fiancée handed Nyad a hard-boiled egg and peanut butter from the escort boat and asked what she thought about while swimming. The mysteries of life under the ocean? Whether humans will ever have to live under the sea because of the state of life on Earth? Actually, Nyad answered, “I was singing the Beverly Hillbillies theme. The rhythm matched my strokes.”

Nyad isn't out to solve any of mankind's great questions or problems. She isn't trying to chase after a dream of her youth. She really just wants to celebrate the hard work and focus that have carried her so far in life and will continue to drive her to new goals for as long as she is willing to pursue them. It's not about the record books or trying to fatten up her résumé— she certainly isn't focused on that right now. Instead, her upcoming swim is about pouring herself into a project with the same passion and vigor she has always brought to life and showing others they can do the same. She insists that “retirement age” doesn't mean anything anymore. “I want people to see me and say, ‘Wow! That's the new 61!”

U decide ★★★★★

Please login or register to submit a rating.

Back to Top | Send to a Friend | Print | BOOK-MARK f t e m

Talk Back

Sound off! Share your thoughts and ideas.

2 Comments

Leave a Comment

Thank you for this relevant article!

August 8, 2011, 2:27 PM

Wonderful article! Thank you!!!

Post a Reply | Report as Offensive

Spectacular!

May 13, 2011, 3:21 PM

Talk about an inspiration! Thank you for this write-up! Fantastic!

<http://www.WomenGetWealthy.com>

Post a Reply | Report as Offensive

You must be logged in to post a comment.

Please click the 'Member Login' link above to login, or register here

Related Resources

Monica Seles: Triumph of Love

★★★★★ Don Yaeger |

Monica Seles was hailed for gracefully handling personal tragedy and heartbreak in public, but privately, she was winning her greatest victory.

Drs. Oz & Roizen: One Good Turn Deserves Another

★★★★★ Mehmet Oz | Michael Roizen |

It's never too late to get back on track with your fitness. Here are more tips for healthy eating and exercise.

Drs. Oz & Roizen: Making You Turns

★★★★★ Mehmet Oz | Michael Roizen |

We all make mistakes, and that's why it's important to be able to make YOU turns to get back on track.

Drs. Oz & Roizen: Energy Reboot

★★★★★ Mehmet Oz | Michael Roizen |

You don't have to accept your flagging energy as a fact of life; find out how to reboot and power up with these tips.

Still Winning

★★★★★ Ivy Hughes |

Born with a paralyzing disability, Tanni Grey-Thompson learned some of life's harsh realities early—and to use them to her advantage as an athlete and activist.

« Previous Article from the Same Section | Main Channel | Next Article from the Same Section »

The Platinum Collection

★★★★★

Winning: It's All in Your Head

★★★★★

The Gift

★★★★★

Bulk Magazines | Gift Subscription | Article Reprints | Subscribe | Store | Blog | Videos | Speakers | Contact Us | Advertising | SUCCESS for Women | FAQ | Privacy

Copyright © SUCCESS Magazine, 2011. All rights reserved.

Designed by SUCCESS Media. CMS, Hosting & Web Development :: ePublishing.