Hello Alex,

Meteorologist Lee Chesneau here.

Please pass this to John Bartlett (I cc'd above but am not able to know if he will get this)

Key West radar shows a Thunderstorm (TSTM) complex that developed over mainland western Cuba this afternoon are moving north (offshore). Expect moderate to heavy rain fall and possible lightning strikes. Winds will be briefly gusting up to 35 knots vicinity TSTMS (likely from a southerly direction). When precipitation starts, typically winds will diminish considerably. By sundown the TSTMS should weaken and abate. Pls send visual and text observation updates often as possible. A 24 hour forecast will follow.

Fair Winds
